

Just some of the praise for
The Wonderful World of the Ladybird Book Artists on Twitter – over 7-week period.

There was more. There was also Instagram and emails and Facebook ...

Oh, that is sad, but take heart!! It was a superb exhibition! So many people reminisced and many were also introduced to the lovely Ladybird range of books because of it. There were lots of children and YP there when I visited. Any plans for another one somewhere else?

The exhibition is like a Ladybird book: a presentation by experts that explains professional-level detail in a serious and respectful way that can be understood by amateurs - & children. It is definitely NOT a Horrible History of Ladybirds.

Highly recommend the exhibition of the history of Ladybird Books @leicestermuseum. Many reminders of childhood and fascinating to see original source material. "How it works, The Camera" started a love of photography, rather than the Hovercraft or Farm Machinery! @LBFlyawayhome

...to the New Walk Museum in Leicester for 'The wonderful world of the Ladybird book artists' exhibition. For those of a certain age, it's an absolute nostalgia trip & I'd highly recommend it. Worth going just to see the original Harry Wingfield illustrations which are beautiful.

Went to Newwalk museum in Leicester the other day. They have a ladybird book exhibition, which took me back to youth but also had many teaching ideas going through my head. If any teachers are passing it may be worth a look. Exhibition finishes 1st September.

Going round the exhibition, I did wonder how many people's view of English/British history had been shaped by Ladybird books. The artwork for the natural history books are excellent, the views of the countryside now look like historical records.
